PERSONAL STATEMENT

Since I started school as a child until I landed my first job as a teacher, education played a central and defining role in my life. I'm not the only one who could make such a statement.

I believe in inspiring, engaging and empowering students to live healthy and purposeful lives. I believe in teaching how to think critically and creatively, and how to become compassionate and life-long learners. In other words, I believe education can make a difference in the world.

To do so, I promote collaborative development between leadership, teachers and parents, and I support the idea of an inclusive school environment that enhance the development of the whole child.

Being fluent in four languages, I value international mindedness and cultural expression as key elements of the learning experience. Finally, I believe that school plays a central role in our societies and has the potential to change the environment that we live in.

For the best.
